1 Part 1: Analyze the Fake News Dataset

1.1 1.1: Import dataset from Ex 1

[25]: #load data dataPath = "data/"
Cleaned_data = pd.read_csv(dataPath + "cleanedData.csv")
```

1.2 1.2 Dataset Analysis

1.2.1 Determine which article types should be omitted, if any.

[26]: typelist = Cleaned_data['type'].unique() print(typelist)
```

```
['unreliable' 'fake' 'clickbait' 'conspiracy' 'reliable' 'bias' 'hate'
 'junksci' 'political' nan 'unknown']

Assuming that the data will be used to train a classifier such as the one in the course project, there are some types that should be omitted. These are the ones that are not certainly either fake or reliable. If a type can't be given one of our two labels it cannot be used for training.

Unknown: If we dont know the article type, it cant be placed in either label.

nan: Omitted for same reason as unknown

Unreliable: The documentation describes it as "Sources that may be reliable but whose contents

[27]: Cleaned_data = Cleaned_data.dropna(subset=['type']) Cleaned_data = Cleaned_data.loc[Cleaned_data['type']!='unknown']
      Cleaned_data = Cleaned_data.loc[Cleaned_data['type']!='unreliable']
```

[28]: # Get the counts for each unique type type_counts = Cleaned_data['type'].value_counts()

      # Print the counts
      for types, count in type_counts.items():
          print(types, ":", count)
```

fake : 155
conspiracy : 31 political : 23
bias : 6
junksci : 6
reliable : 3 clickbait : 1
hate : 1
```

1.2.2 Group the remaining types into ‘fake’ and ‘reliable’. Argue for your choice.

1.2.3 Fake

Fake Conspiracy Bias Junksci
Hate

From the documentaion it can be seen that Conspiracy, Hate, bias and junksci are mostly made up either of statements misrepresenting fact or of content that is either highly biased by or entirely based on belief. In either case content that is not backed by science or fact. Fake is fake

1.2.4 Reliable

Political Reliable
Clickbait

Political and Clickbait are both described as generally reliable, with slight bias or inaccuracy. Reliable is reliable.

[ ]: # groups (reliable, political and clickbait) as truenews 1 and (all others) in ↪ fakenews 0
      #note this is naive and should be reconsidered later Cleaned_data['type'] = Cleaned_data['type'].replace({'^reliable$': '1', ↪ '^political$': '1', '^clickbait$': '1'}, regex=True) Cleaned_data['type'] = Cleaned_data['type'].replace(r'^(?!1$).+', '0', ↪ regex=True) # Replace everything except '1' with '0'

1.2.5 Examine the percentage distribution of ‘reliable’ vs. ‘fake’ articles. Is the dataset balanced? Discuss the importance of a balanced distribution.

[30]: # Get the counts for each unique type countFake, countReliable = Cleaned_data['type'].value_counts() countTotal = countFake + countReliable labels = ['fake', 'true'] PercentageValues = [countFake / countTotal * 100, countReliable / countTotal * ↪ 100] percentage_df = pd.DataFrame({

    'Type': labels,
    'Percentage': PercentageValues
})
```

```
[31]: fig, ax = plt.subplots(figsize=(12, 6))

ax.set_ylabel('Labels') ax.set_title('Percentage of total Articles') plt.xticks(rotation=90)

plt.show()
print('fake percentage:', countFake / countTotal * 100) print('reliable percentage:', countReliable / countTotal * 100) print('relation:', countFake / countReliable)
```

fake percentage: 88.05309734513274 reliable percentage: 11.946902654867257 relation: 7.37037037037037

The data is highly unbalanced in favor of fake articles, with a ratio of approximately 1:7. For a model to effectively learn the distinguishing features of each class, it is beneficial to expose it to an even distribution of both classes. In cases like ours, where one class dominates the data, a model trained on such an imbalanced dataset may become biased. It could overfit by learning the statistical advantage of predicting the majority class, rather than learning the distinct features that differentiate both classes. As a result, the model might predict the majority class disproportionately, regardless of the content, and fail to accurately identify the minority class.

options.add_argument("-profile") options.add_argument("/home/andreas-linus-thalund-midtgaard/snap/firefox/common/↳.mozilla/firefox/kao2pljk.default") #replace with path on you setup

#had some troubles with library. Above turned out to be necessary

browser = webdriver.Firefox(options=options)

browser.get("https://www.bbc.com/news/world/europe")

html = browser.page_source

3 Part 3: Scraping Article Text

3.1 3.1: Article Inspection

There is an article tag, and the first h1 tag after this seems to be the headline.

Any p tags within article tag seem to contain only text.

The first instance of time tag indicates the published date and the author can be found by the simple rule of: `Author= //*[@id="main-content"]/article/div[2]/div/div[2]/div/div/span`

3.2 3.2: Scraping function given link

Function that takes a URL and returns a dictionary with the article's content

```
[59]: scrapedLinks_BBC_df = pd.read_csv(dataPath + "scrapedLinks_bbc.csv")

[61]: #user is responsible for creating and closing browser def scrapeText(link): browser.get(link)
    time.sleep(2)

    # Extracting content
    try:
        headline = browser.find_element(By.XPATH, "//article//h1").text except NoSuchElementException:
        headline = "n/a"

    try:
        published_date = browser.find_element(By.XPATH, "//article//time").
        ↪get_attribute("datetime")
    except NoSuchElementException:
        published_date = "n/a"

    try:
        author = browser.find_element(By.XPATH, '//*[@id="main-content"]/ ↪article/div[2]/div/div[2]/div/div/span').text except NoSuchElementException:
        author = "n/a"

    try:
        article_paragraphs = browser.find_elements(By.XPATH, "//article//p") article_text = "\n".join([p.text for p in article_paragraphs]) except NoSuchElementException:
        article_text = "n/a"

    #creating article dict article = {
        "Content": article_text,
        "Published": published_date,
```

        "Title": headline,
        "Author": author

{'Content': 'Actor Morgan Freeman has led tributes at the annual Academy Awards ceremony to fellow Hollywood star Gene Hackman, whose death last month is under police investigation.\n"
This week, our community lost a giant and I lost a dear friend," said Freeman, who worked with Hackman in two films, including 1992\'s Unforgiven, which won Hackman his second Oscar.\n"
Like everyone who ever shared a scene with him I learned he was a generous performer whose gifts elevated everyone\'s work," Freeman said.\nHackman, 95, and his wife Betsy Arakawa, 65, were found dead at their home in New Mexico days ago.\n"
He received two Oscars but more importantly he won the hearts of film-lovers all over the world," Freeman said in his speech during Sunday night\'s 97th Academy Awards ceremony in Los Angeles.\n"
He added that Hackman had told him: "I don\'t think about legacy, I just hope people remember me as someone who tried to do good work."
\n"Gene, you\'ll be remembered for that and so much more. Rest in peace, my friend."
\nMorgan, 87, also starred alongside Hackman in 2000 film Under Suspicion.\n"
The Oscars ceremony also featured an in memoriam segment, where clips from some of the character actor\'s best films over his 60-year career were shown.\n" Hackman was known for such movies as The French Connection, The Conversation, Bonnie and Clyde, Mississippi Burning and Superman, but had not starred in a film since his retirement from acting in 2004.\n"
Officials found Hackman and Ms Arakawa\'s bodies on Wednesday, about 10 days after investigators believe he died.\n"
The results of a post-mortem examination are pending, and officials say it may take weeks to determine how the couple died.\n"
The Oscars ceremony also featured a tribute to music producer Quincy Jones, led by Whoopi Goldberg, Oprah and Queen Latifah, who sang a song in his memory.\n"
Jones received seven Oscar nominations in in his lifetime, including in 1967 when he became the first black composer to be nominated for the original song category.\n"
Jones died in November at the age of 91.', 'Published': '2025-03-03T04:14:20.835Z', 'Title': "Morgan Freeman leads Oscars tribute to 'dear friend' Gene Hackman", 'Author': 'Max Matza'}

3.4 3.5: Will it make sense to include this data in the project?

The BBC is generally considered a trustworthy source, but without fact-checking each of the 600+ articles individually, we cannot be certain of their accuracy. Even in the best of cases reliable news sources can occasionally produce politically biased or clickbait content. This would not be the biggest issue as we have still chosen to classify these as reliable. In the worst case however, our assumption of total reliability is entirely incorrect, in which case we risk training our model on mislabeled data, leading to skewed results. Thus there is also a clear reason for why including this new data may be unwise.

[76]: n_a_counts = (scrapedArticles_df == "n/a").sum() print(n_a_counts)
```

```
Content      0
Published    93
Title        93
Author       178
dtype: int64

There seems to be a noninsignificant amount of empty entries. This is most likely due to the scraper being written for bbc articles. Therefore pages that fall outside of this (like videos or sport) are most likely not scraped correctly. (could also be due to lows in network speed making pages not load entirely, a possibility supported by the timeouterror)
